

Patrick Keane

Biography

Born in the Midwest, raised on the “mean streets” of Orange County CA, college in Montana and a three-year stint in Asia make Patrick Keane a comedian with a background. Why college in Montana? Football scholarship. Why Asia? To get far away from football.

Patrick has appeared on Comedy Central’s ‘Live At Gotham’, the Late Late Show with Craig Ferguson, Jimmy Kimmel Live, the Bob and Tom Show, XM Radio, Spotify, Comics Unleashed, and the Montreal Comedy Festival. Asked what is the key to comedy, this writer/actor/comedian says, “I try not to be funny and it usually works.” Patrick is the creator and lead actor in the web series “5th Quarter”; a weekly press conference held every Sunday night detailing what it was like to watch football all day with his buddies.

He can name all the U.S. Presidents in order and knows every Super Bowl match-up in history. Although very knowledgeable about sports, he doesn’t remember all the names of his family members. His dry sarcastic self-deprecating style originates from comedy influences Bill Murray, Gene Wilder and John Wooden.

Like Tom Hagen, Patrick Keane is of German-Irish descent.

In addition to doing comedy Patrick also likes to do magic, and sometimes he's able to make comedy completely disappear from the room.
